CARLOS JARQUE, who obtained the degree of M.Sc. in Statistics in the University of London in 1978, attained standards very rarely equalled. He obtained grades of 90%, 88% and 76% in the three written examinations, where 70% is graded "first-class". In his project, he obtained a grade of 90%, and reached extremely high standards, the examiners considering the material worthy of publication. In all, his was a quite exceptional performance, with great promise for his future.

Dear Dr. Jarque:

Congratulations for having been selected to participate in our 1984 Fulbright Post-Doctoral Research Program.

I understand that you will be at Harvard University, conducting research on Econometrics.

Your excellent academic record and your high ranking in the panel of candidates for this year's awards provide strong indications that you will do well in your studies in the United States.

I wish you a pleasant and fruitful stay in the United States and hope that your experience will help contribute to increased understanding between our people.

Sincerely,

John Gavin
